New Freight Rate

Basis Threatens

The Consumer

Just the other day the South and West won an important victory on the road to freight rate equality with the North and East—but now it looks as though the fight is starting all over again.

The government has just ordered manufacturers to stop the practice of quoting delivered prices, by which they sought to stabilize the price of an article whether delivered close by or far from the place of actual manufacture.

Today the government is insisting that the mills fix their price f.o.b. factory, plus the prevailing freight charge to point of delivery.

The future effect is obvious—sections like those around the great manufacturing cities will get their goods cheap; but out here in the South and West, far from metropolitan centers, goods will be higher because of the expensive (and unadjusted) freight bill.

And there is a prospect still more grim than this. Alfred Schindler, former Undersecretary of Commerce, now chairman of the National Federation of Sales Executives, thinks the new government order will break down nation-wide distribution of advertised brands in remote sections and will encourage local monopolies.

In a statement prepared for the Senate Trade Policies Subcommittee Mr. Schindler said last week:

That under the new policy of the Federal Trade Commission and the U. S. Supreme Court, the retail dealer located thousands of miles away from a supplier may be forced to drop some lines unless he can find a supplier closer by.

In many cases, he continued, "it will be impossible to cause exclusive franchises for similar products to be held by his local competitors. Many dealers have built valuable goodwill for their business by featuring and stocking exclusively well-known nationally advertised trademarked products."

However, if the cost of these branded products f.o.b. mill causes to be competitive in the local market the dealer will lose the goodwill in the cultivation of which he has invested many years of considerable promotional and advertising effort.

It is perfectly reasonable to assume that the business public is bound to be impatient of the federal government's bombastic claims that it can control monopolistic practices and bring prices down, when in fact nearly every governmental move in years has had the definite effect of increasing monopoly and pushing prices still higher.

Blitz Invasion of Hyderabad Reflects on India's Leaders

By JAMES THRASHER

We don't pretend to know what the exact political score is in the far-off subcontinent of India. Yet the blitzkrieg invasion of the princely state of Hyderabad makes us suspect that maybe the new Indian government is a little too big for its breeches.

England ruled the Indians for a couple of centuries. It gave them inaccess to law, though rather reluctantly, until finally the English government granted them independence within the British Commonwealth. Since America went through somewhat the same process, only with happier results, few Americans would blame the Indians for wanting to govern themselves, or for insisting that they were capable of self-government.

But what happens? It looks from here as if the Indian leaders, who were pushed around for so long, are now doing some pushing around themselves.

Undoubtedly things in Hyderabad could stand improvement. The Nizam, ruler of the once-prime state, is said to be one of the world's richest men. That doesn't sound like a condition of ideal government. Yet recent raids from Hyderabad have been made by the federal government to collect taxes. They were collected, but the Nizam, who took me around the place, was an institution.

Here, indeed, was an institution. The Soviet government could with pride exhibit to distinguished foreign visitors. I was curious to learn who had developed it. But there was a strange hush whenever that question was raised. I had an inkling when I discovered that the mother of my predecessor was a sorrowful and lonely little old woman, was living on the estate. Soon enough the mystery was cleared up by the new director, Anatoli Kukhmanov, a militant Communist of the Central Asian Bashkir tribe, who took me around the place. He even spoke Russian with a thick accent. The subject he brought up in school was the history of the Communist Party.

"With your rich experience, you can do big things here," he observed on the tour, clutching to me all day and until late into the night. I was fascinated by the specimens in the museum, by the herbarium in the herbarium and the library, which boasted a truly valuable collection of books on astronomy. Everything had its proper label. Kukhmanov felt my admiring hand and soon satisfied my curiosity.

He took some volumes off the shelves and sarcastically read the titles, which had been tucked away in certain volumes. The author, Ivanov, whose specialties were natural science and meteorology, with relish. Kukhmanov cited this and other things as evidence of Ivanov's counter-revolutionary activity. Well, this "enemy of the people" had been well taken care of, he intimated. Ivanov had been packed off to a polar camp to serve as a meteorologist.

The old mother, I ascertained later, would go off to Moscow now and then, trying to find out where her son had been exiled and the term of his sentence. She would come back empty-handed. My own dad had to be a secret agent. No sign of life remained from him.

In Moscow I ran into a man from our town of Shavayevsk, who brought my own son to the new statistician. Kukhmanov was the mother of Kukhmanov, a former pupil of mine, whose father was a certain blacksmith. Kukhmanov and his wife had I can still see his glassy eyes and reddened face popular he was with the girls. His father was a non-political proletarian. The boy and his parents' joy, Kukhmanov, the Kukhmanovs, etc., decided to return home. He turned to the Therapy Institute, graduated and was appointed to the city hospital of Voskresensk. The infection had been the result of a chest cold.

At the end of that year he was sent to a hospital of sealing fever and tuberculosis in the Vorkuta region. Some 100 children of Central Siberia suffered from the disease. The boy was diagnosed as having a tubercular affection of the lungs, but he recovered and was sent to the city hospital of Voskresensk. The infection had been the result of a chest cold.

The idea of Hyderabad trying to maintain independence while completely surrounded by India may be facetious. Its position in Hindustan may be legal and just. But surely the United Nations has the authority and the willingness to settle the situation.

It was Hyderabad's bad luck that appealed to the UN. India seems to feel that the hindrance of independence was a license to carry on a strong

Finds Nothing Secure Under Red Regime

In today's installment of her story, Mrs. Kasenkina tells of her mission to Moscow to get a job teaching at a model school, what she found there and a heartbreaking tale of the great purge.

By OKSANA S. KASENKINA
Edited by Isaac Don Levine

Upon my arrival in Moscow I went straight from the railroad station to the office of "Obloznam," the departmental organization for the provinces of Moscow, where I was received with open arms by the veteran educator Mikhalkov.

He had been seeking an experienced instructor in natural sciences to fill a sudden vacancy. I was left to guess what had caused it but during the great purge even a shug of the shoulders told a family story.

My chief worry was how to deal with the inevitable question of my marital status. I decided to answer it with the simple statement that I was a widow. To my great relief there was no further probing by Mikhalkov who was delighted with all my diplomas and documents, as there were not many qualified natural science teachers to be gained.

The railway and the Order of Railway Conductors and the brotherhood of Railway Trainmen agreed today that a second time in history that a railroad agreement has been reached on an national scale without government intervention.

The railroads and the Order of Railway Conductors and the brotherhood of Railway Trainmen agreed on a compromise wage boost late yesterday. The unions originally demanded a 25 per cent pay raise. Negotiations between the railroads and the unions began Sept. 14.

Last year the same two unions reached an agreement by direct negotiations with the railroads. That contract granted a 15 1/2 cent hourly raise which became the pattern for the entire industry.

Yesterday's agreement was the first break in the third-round wage negotiations between the railroads and 21 unions representing 1,400,000 rail workers.

Paul P. Loomis, who headed the railroads team of negotiators, said bargaining talks were continuing with representatives of three other operating unions representing engineers, enginemen and firemen, and switchmen. These unions demand the difference between the 15 1/2 cents awarded them as a second round increase and the 30 per cent they had demanded.

Negotiations broke down two weeks ago between the railroads and 16 other unions, representing about 1,000,000 non-operating employees doing shop, maintenance and clerical work. The national railroad mediation board has intervened and is trying to effect a settlement in separate meetings with the railroads and unions in Chicago.

I got the position. The school located at Tuchikovo, some 50 miles west of Moscow, occupied the former estate of Dubrovina, with a mansion having gilded mirrors, murals, and fine musical decorations. The former owner had long since been dispossessed. Included in the institution attended by nearly 400 students from the surrounding countryside, was a two-story brick building erected by the Zemstvo—the liberal social welfare body which under the czar had set up a national network of schools and hospitals. There was a finance annex of Soviet construction used as a dormitory.

Here, indeed, was an institution the Soviet government could with pride exhibit to distinguished foreign visitors. I was curious to learn who had developed it. But there was a strange hush whenever that question was raised. I had an inkling when I discovered that the mother of my predecessor was a sorrowful and lonely little old woman, was living on the estate.

Soon enough the mystery was cleared up by the new director, Walter E. Hoody, Jr., economist for the federal reserve bank of Chicago, said business probably will be good for the rest of the year ahead of us.

Hoody said he noted "unmistakable signs of weakness," but added that no "broad downturn of business levels seems imminent because of the apparent underlying strength of prevailing economic and political forces."

The Northern Trust Co. reported in its monthly bulletin that declining prices of grain and cotton, a more favorable export-import ratio, and the prospects of a new high production of finished steel this year all indicate a more stable economy.

The bulletin said that grains, cotton, radios and other electrical appliances have now reached the point where supply equals demand and predicted that bumper crops this year will cause food prices to slide downward.

Ex-Resident of Nevada Shot to Death

J. C. Garrett, aged 42, a former resident of Nevada county was fatally shot in a gun battle with an unknown citizen picked up at Elko, Arizona, it was learned here today.

Editor in Kiwanis Address

For National Newspaper Week Kiwanis club at its luncheon today noon in Hotel Barlow heard Alex. H. Washburn, publisher of The Star, repeat the address, "Tomorrow's No Holiday," which he originally delivered at a school commencement in Pennsylvania last June 5. He was introduced by Dr. Emmet Thompson, in charge of program.

Mr. Washburn discussed, in advance of the prepared text, a recent government ruling to compel factories to abandon their delivered-prices system and quote instead 1946 mill prices with freight added. He said the newspapers argued the point that the successful fight of the South and West for freight parity with the East, and now it looks as though much of it will have to be done all over again—because the effect of the new government ruling will be to make prices cheap in areas around the manufacturing cities but high in remote territories like our own.

Hervey Holt, club president, reported on the recent Mo-Kan-Ark district convention in Little Rock; with reports from other delegates to follow in subsequent club meetings.

Kiwanis guests today besides the speaker: Aaron Tollett, Basil York, both of Hope; Dr. M. Ray McKay, Little Rock; Prentiss Lane, St. Louis; and Bill Keltner, Fort Worth.

Just before the crucial session began, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., went up on the platform and shook hands with U. S. Delegate Warren Austin and U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie.

Parodi said the argument of Vichinsky yesterday was based on two contentions:

1. Article 107 of the U. N. charter forbade the United Nations to intervene in a matter concerning Germany before the "Big Four" had written a peace treaty.

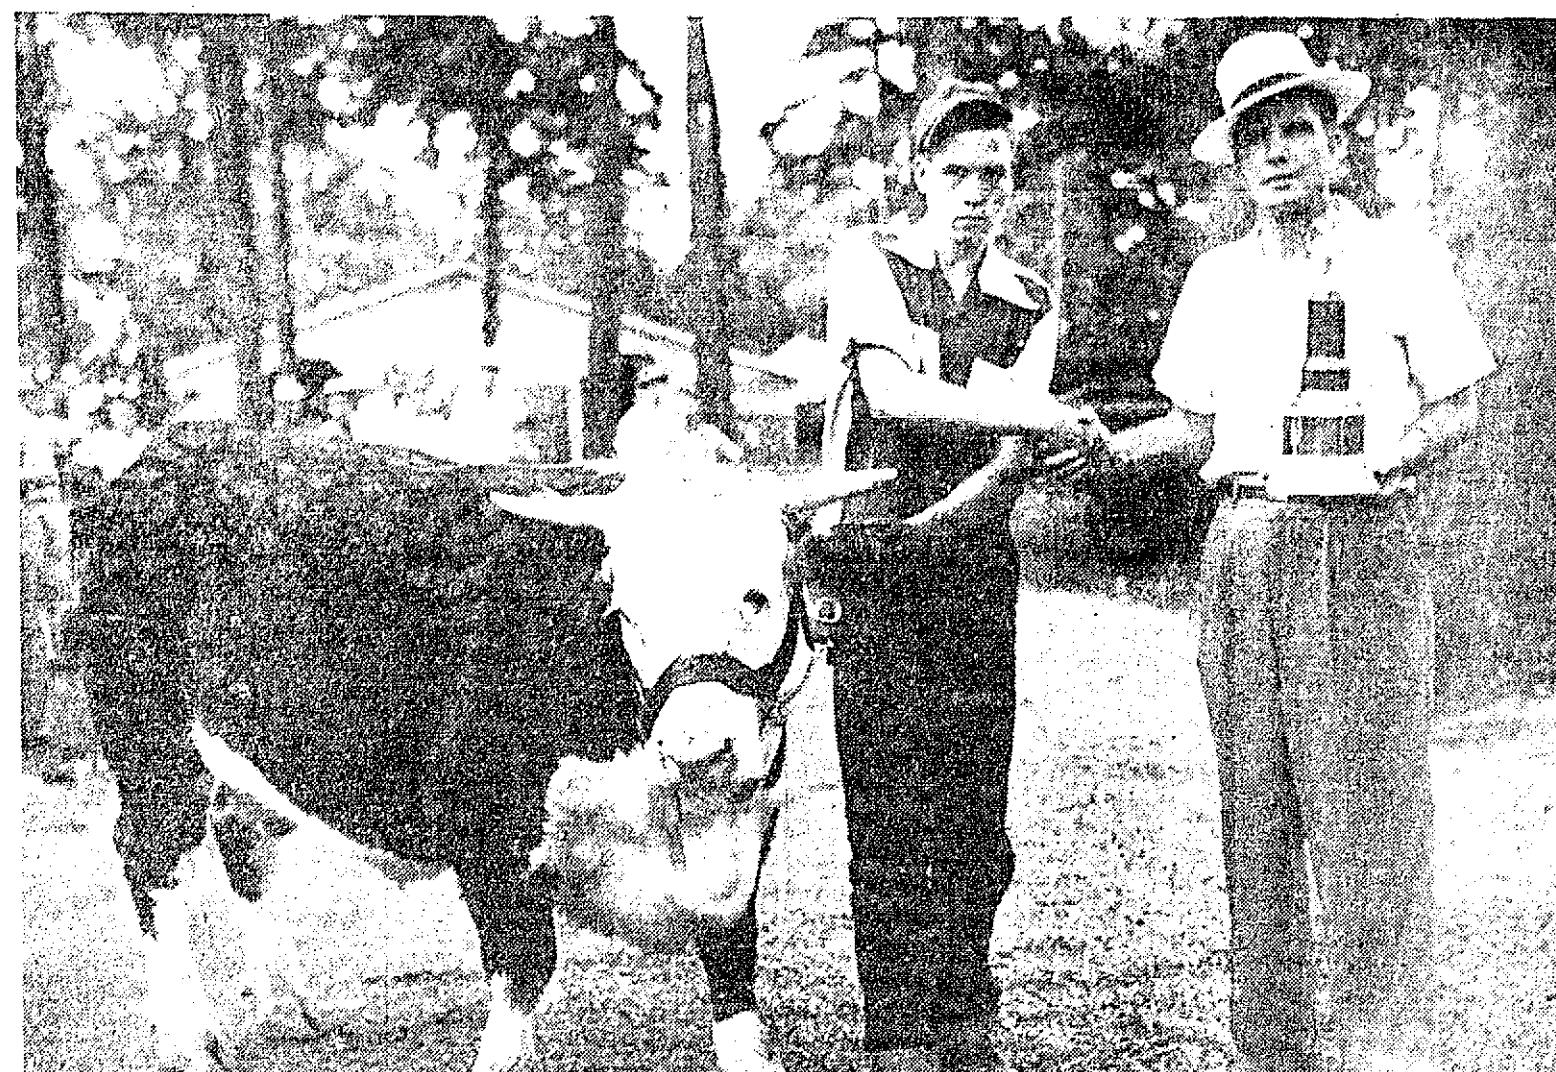

2. No threat to peace existed in Berlin.

Parodi said the second point was one of substance and had no bearing on whether the item should be put on the agenda.

Article 107, he said, was aimed at the former enemy states and not at members of the United Nations.

Barkley and Warren Carry Campaign Ball

By The Associated Press
President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey let their running mates carry the campaign ball today as they prepared for the next round in the presidential contest.

Mr. Truman stuck close by the White House and added new touches to the speech-making he is expected to resume tomorrow with a tour extending into his Republican opponents' home state.

Dewey arranged to spend most of the day in closed sessions at Albany with John Foster Dulles, his foreign affairs adviser, who made a special flight from Paris to report on United Nations deliberations of the Berlin crisis.

In advance of that huddle, the Republicans put Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, their chief foreign policy spokesman in Congress, on a nationwide broadcast last night. Vandenberg said this country's bipartisanship leaves the voters free to switch administrations without affecting the continuity of that policy.

The vice presidential candidates meanwhile headed their cross-country caravans into sections trail-blazed earlier by Mr. Truman and the New York governor. Senator Alben W. Barkley, the Democratic nominee, planned to fly to Colorado for a speaking date at Greeley tonight. The Kentuckian toured the Iowa and Minnesota grain belt yesterday, stressing his party's agriculture record. He said the national farm income had been increased from $5,000,000,000 in 1932 to a current figure of $3,000,000.

Accusing the Republicans of trying to stir class division between agriculture and labor, Barkley cited this "repulsive tactic."

Gov. Earl Warren, the No. 2 GOP candidate, carried his "unity" campaign to Charleston, W. Va., for a major talk tonight.

The Californian told a Pittsburgh rally last night this country could arm itself against inflation and Vandenberg went on. "But it shall never be said of us that we voluntarily abandoned the council chamber as the forum of our choice."

Recalling the 1944 campaign appeal stressed by the late Wendell Willkie — "None but the patriotic has been attacking the bi-partisan can be free" — Warren added to a new theme.

"Only the united can be either," the former secretary of Agriculture said the Democrats and Republicans are "sniping away" at each other points.

The chairman of the Senate Farmland Committee said the "normal grain surplus" program is a "cancer" which the government is fighting.

"Invest in everybody's peace, our years and surplus in big crop years is automatically included."

"We shall keep our powder dry," ton" by actions of both parties.

Hot Springs Man Killed in Accident

Hot Springs, Oct. 5 — (P.T.) — Jewel Statler, 36, of Hot Springs, was killed here yesterday when a load of logs he was removing from a truck tumbled on him.

He is survived by his widow, two sons and his parents.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, the son, Miss, where the States Rights movement was born, meanwhile formed their own state party machinery to press the electoral vote battle in November.

"The Southern way of life is safest in the hands of the regular Democratic party," they declared.

Heir Jailed for Spending Fortune

New York, Oct. 5 -- UP -- The 42-year-old heir to a maritime fortune was held in Tombs prison without bail today, charged with embezzling $1,326,000 from the family estate in order "to live well."

Leonard B. Clark, Harvard Law school graduate, was held for allegedly draining the money from $2,500,000 trust funds his father, Capt. Eleazar Clark, of Maine, had set up for the care of his family.

District Attorney Frank S. Hogan said Clark had spent the money on himself at the rate of almost $100,000 a year since the death of his father in 1936. Hogan said this was the way the money went:

1. $10,000 a year for bills at the Yale, Harvard, West Side Tennis and River clubs.

2. $10,000 a year for the maintenance of several automobiles.

3. $2,000 a year for theater tickets.

4. $24,000 a year for household expenses of his wife, Janet.

5. $12,000 on a stamp collection during the past eight months.

6. Other miscellaneous expenses including upkeep on $140,000 insurance, a summer home at North Hero, Vt., on Lake Champlain, and clothes.

Hogan said the shortages in the trust funds were discovered after Clark attempted suicide Sept. 1, when some speculative schemes he had hoped would replenish the missing funds failed.

Clark was held for hearing Oct. 19 by Chief Magistrate Edgar A. Bromberger.
